DECORATION DAY. he Blue and the Gray Join Hands an Hearts in Maryland and Virginia.

thehmond Dispatch, May 33.

To-day is Federal Memorial day, and as such will be suitably commemorated. Lieutenant Robert Harrold, commanding Company "D." First Virginia regimen has written a letter to Captain B. C. Cook tendering your company as escort to this Post to the National cemetery, near this ity, on the 30th instant, and there fire a salute in honor of the Federal dead.

"In reply, permit me to say, in behalf of the comrades of this Post, that in accepting your kind offer I cannot do so without conveying to you and the other members of your command the assurance that your action is not only highly appreciated by every member of this Post, but must meet the approval of every man North and South who believes that, inasmuch as the brave men who fell in the late war have stricken hands and proclaimed truce forever, the living should strike hands also, that we may again be friends and brethren." salute in honor of the Federal dead.

ren."
R. E. Lee Camp, No. 1, Confederate Veterans, has been invited to join in the line of march from the First Regiment armory to the eastern terminus of Main street, from whence the cemetery will be reached by private conveyances.

The Richmand Ceremony.

National Memorial Day was observed vesterday with impressive and appropriate yesterday with impressive and appropriate ceremonies. A special feature of the day was the parade of Company D, (Old Dominion Guard), First Virginia regiment, and Lee Camp, No. 1, Southern Veterans, as escort for the Phil. Kearney Post, Grand Army of the Republic. Promptly at 4½ o'clock the veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic and Lee Camp, Confedera's Veterans assembled at the Regimental Armory and formed in line, with Company D, as escort, headed by Voelker's Band, and marched to the foot of Main street, where conveyances transferred the party to the cemetery.

At the cemetery there was a perfect jam of vehicles and carriages. Company D, marched in with reversed arms, halted at the monumental cannons, saluting the

Rev. P. A. Peterson chaplain of Lee Camp, Confederate Veterans, and former chaplain of the Twelfth Virginia regiment, chapiain of the Twelith Virginia regiment, read impressive funeral ceremonier; after which the large crowd joined in singing "Nearer, my God, to Thee." After the ceremonies Company D fired a volley of three rounds, and while the band was playing the National bymn "America" their committee nailed to the flag suff their beautiful floral tribute of the United States crest or shield, surmounted by an arch, in the circumference of which were crossed sabres made of flowers.

Lee Camp presented the Post with a beautiful shaped floral offering in the shape of the national flag, made of flowers. After the return the Post entertained the Veterans and Company D at the armory with refreshments.

The colored military, headed by a full brass band, also paraded the streets, and, besides, many civic societies turned out. The number of flowers brought out to the cometery was larger than usual, and the fraternity of feeling exhibited shows that time has mellowed feelings of hatred into riendship of the warmest sort. Truly the cruel war is over, and only its bitter memo-

An Ex-Confederate Delivers the Oration

Special Dispatch to the Baltimore American.

Annapolia, May 30.—The observance of Decoration Day here this afternoon was an event in the history of the city. Excepting the carnival, no occasion has ever attracted so large a crowd or awakened a more general interest. Federals and Confederates united in the commemoration of the day, a Confederate orator delivered the oration, and man of both sides atrived together with nnited in the commemoration of the day, a Confederate orator delivered the oration, and men of both sides strived together with heartfelt zeal to do the most fitting honors to the heroes who had worn the blue.

After music Hon. S. T. McCullough, the orator of the day, was presented to the large audience amidat very hearly applause. He spoke for over an hour and received the unbroken attention of those assembled during the whole time. At the start he said that he did not come to revive the bitter memories of the war, but to draw the veil of oblivion over the unbappy past and place upon the closed grave of buried enmitties and animosities the poppy and the evergreen, so beautifully emblematic of forgetfulness and worth.

The history of the world, luminous as it is with the heroic deeds of those who have offered up their lives in defence of their solemn and honest convictions of right and duty, furnishes no fountains of inspiration purer or more unfailing than those opened on the fatal field of our civil struggle. But the golden streaks of the morning broad bannered upon our national horizon tell us that the long, dark night of our sorrows

"Is the lady your kindred?" "Yes, yes,"

the golden stream of the horizon tell bannered upon our national horizon tell us that the long, dark night of our sorrows is passing away, and the long-looked for day is dawning when the glorious traditions of the Union are to be revived. The different part when the stream in the natural tells are the stream of the stream is passing away, and the long-locked for day is dawning when the glorious traditions of the Union are to be revived. The differences of the war are in the past. The most tender and touching tributes of respect to the memories of their fallen foemen elequently proclaim that they have forgotten the past and joined the right hand of fellowship and love. The soldiers of both armies can but respect each other. Alike they were honest, earnest and true to their convictions; alike they endured the fatigue and tedium of the march, the privations of the camp and the loneliness of the picket; alike they felt the chagria of defeat and the glory of victory, and to-day the soldiers of the war, in writing the epitaph of the dead of both armies, will say they fell in the discharge of duty. When the Confederates, he continued, furled the glories of their flag amid the gloom and disaster of Appomattox, they at the same time took up with the true hand of Southern honor and faith the staff that held the stars and sripes. Let us hope that the flag that waved victoriously at Appomatiox over the unterrified remnant of our living braves will forever hereafter speak, as it floats the ensign of our nationality, of a glorious sisterhood of free, separate, sovereign and independent States, each the peer and equal of the other, of States no longer kept asouder by conflicting interests and hostill laws, but bound indissolubly together by mutual affection and love, and of one common hope and destiny. May its broad and ample folds, untainted by aught to remind us of aur secrifices of tears and blood, but radiant with the brighter glories of peace as they float over the land and sea, rave the emblem of a government, happy resperous and free, and of laws wise prosperous and free, and beneficent, equal and just.

A Pleasing Feature. A pleasing feature of the day was the placing of flowers upon the Confederate Monument by the Union veterans.

Col. John L. Thomas, of Baltimore, at Frederick.

To-day, at the capital of our state, on the invitation of the Grand Army Post of Anand also to a belief that the "estern passenger ware and reching music of the market showed increased activity, and there was a general advance in prices of the mod the control of the contro invitation of the Grand Army Fost of Arnapolis, the boys who wore the blue and the boys who wore the gray are marching arm in arm and keeping step to the music of the Union, decorating the grayes of the Union and Confederate dead alike, and the orator selected for the occasion was a gallant officer in the Confederate army, and following this example I sincerely hope lant officer in the Confederate army, and following this example I sincerely hope with the God may hasten the day when this national holiday will not be exclusively devoted to decorating the Union dead, but have been supported by the laurel weath, on the graves of the dead who fell on both sides; when the words that shall be uttered shall be words of love and trust, and hope and faith for our regenerated land, and when the hymns that are sung shall be full of the sentiment.

"No more shall the war cry sever,
Or the winding river be red,
They baselsh our anger forever
When they lauret the graves of our dead,
Uater the sod and the dew,
Waiting the jud mont day,
Love and tears for the Blue,
